AS KENNEDY TAKES OVER-

AND

New faces of the Kennedy starting team shown on these pages. Indicate the big changes taking place at the top in the U.S. Government.

Businessmen no longer are to be in the majority. Lawyers, educators, economists and engineers are filling the positions of leadership in the new Administration. Many are about the same age as the 43-year-old President. Some are younger.

In Dwight D. Eisenhower's first Administration, 22 of the 50 most important posts went to businessmen. These men were older than the Kennedy group. They had built successful careers in industry, business, commerce, finance.

In 51 high-ranking jobs in John F. Kennedy's Administration, there are 22 lawyers, eight college executives or professors. Only six businessmen are in this top echelon. Average age of the entire group is 48.

As the Kennedy team took shape, its complexion changed. At first, it was heavily weighted with Easterners of Ivy League college backgrounds. Later appointments gave more representation to the Midwest and West.
